An Etude In Ivory

A gleam of amber through the sunset's glow
And on the keys your hands that softly creep,
Aimlessly wandering like little sheep,
Lost in a pasture-land of long ago.
Dusk and the shadows sitting to and fro
And far away upon some twilight steep,
Fast in the dew-washed asphodel asleep,
Drunk in dreams that stir as drifted snow.

Where now the wind is but a shepherd's reed,
And overhead the clouds a scattered fleece,
Swift as the sea and restless as the sea
Or where home home across that pallid mead,
I see no more the lovely vales of Greece—
Only your hands that are of Ivory!
